TRIVIA NIGHT – Thank you!

A grand "Thank You" to ALL who helped in any manner for our successful Trivia Night fundraiser; there were so many volunteers and this simple thank you seems to be such a small gesture of my gratitude. We could not have done it without all your help and donations! A special thank you to chair-person Lynn Brudnak-Kelly who coordinated the entire event. God Bless you for your stewardship of our Cathedral parish. - Father Buczak

FOR CONSIDERATION

Examples of how the saints themselves reveal their hidden relics to men are a justification of the respect that should be paid to these relics, not to mention their miraculous properties, which is a second justification. St. Petka's grave was known by no-one for a long time. It so happened that a sailor died and his body was thrown near to the saint's grave. When the body became carrion and began to give off an unbearable stench, a monk who lived in the vicinity called the villagers to bury the body. It came about that they buried it in St. Petka's very grave. That night, St. Petka appeared in a dream to one of the villagers, George by name, who had buried the corpse. She appeared as a beautiful and resplendent queen, surrounded by many glorious warriors, and said: 'George, dig up my relics at once and take them to some other place. I can't bear the stench of that corpse!', and St. Petka told him who and whence she was. The same night another villager, Euphemia, had the same vision. The following day, the villagers went and began digging, and indeed found the relics of St. Petka, retaining a rare fragrance and, which was quickly demonstrated, having wonderworking power.

About the relics of St. Gervasius and St. Protasius, St. Ambrose relates how, in a similar way, they were revealed to him. One night, two youths and an old man appeared to the wakeful Ambrose. He thought that the last was the Apostle Paul. While the young men kept silent, the old man told Ambrose that they were Christ's martyrs, that their relics lay in the precise place which Ambrose was at prayer, and that everything else about them could be learned from a little book that would be found in their grave. The next day, Ambrose recounted his vision, began to dig and indeed found the relics of two men, of whom it was learned from the discovered book that they were Gervasius and Protasius. In Ambrose's presence, a blind man, Servirus, touched these holy relics and immediately received his sight.
