QUOTES FROM THE HOLY FATHERS

Be careful when you are in church….you must know my child, that there are countless angels above the people in church and invisibly sing along with them. But when one of the faithful begins to joke, to talk about worldly things, or to comment about others, the angels who see him, drop the hymn and weep bitterly for his plight.

St. Nephon of Constantia

The demons tempt by thoughts, by mental images, by the remembrance of the most needed objects, by reflections on apparently spiritual subjects, by arousing anxiety and worry and various fears and apprehensions, and by other manifestations of unbelief. In all the various conflicts of the demons, a sense of disturbance or agitation always serves as a true sign of the approach of fallen spirits, even though the action produced by them has an appearance of justice. To ascetics living in solitude and praying vigorously, devils appear in the form of radiant angels, martyrs, saints and even Christ Himself. One should not fear the threats of the devil, and towards all apparitions in general one should maintain at attitude of extreme incredulity. In such cases, which however are rare, our foremost duty is to have recourse to God, to surrender ourselves wholly to His will and to ask for His help. We should pay no attention to the apparitions and enter into relations or conversation with them, regarding ourselves as unfit to deal with hostile spirits and unworthy to converse with holy spirits.

St. Ignatius Brianchaninov

Remembrance of wrongs is the consummation of anger, the keeper of sins, hatred of righteousness, ruin of virtues, poison of the soul, worm of the mind, shame of prayer, cessation of supplication, estrangement of love, a nail stuck in the soul, pleasure-less feeling, cherished in the sweetness of bitterness, continuous sin, unsleeping transgression, and hourly malice.

St. John Chrysostom

Keep in your thoughts that when misfortune comes, you cannot throw it off like a tight-fitting garment; you must bear it. Whether in a Christian way or in a non-Christian way, you cannot avoid bearing it; so it is better to bear it in a Christian way. Complaining will not deliver you from misfortune, but only make it heavier, whereas humble submission to God's providence and a good attitude relieve the burden of misfortunes.

St. Theophan the Recluse
